Finally, a building that breathes

- Lucky Mae F. Quilao

In collaboration of the UAE University and the University of Aberdeen, and with the support of the Dubai Municipality and the Al Hamad Group of Dubai. The research team includes Dr. Mohamed Imbabi of Aberdeen University in the U.K., Dr. Khalid Al Sallal of UAE Univesity and Eng. Ramadan Ben Amer GM of Efors-Dubai. "The first dynamic breathing building (DBB) will be erected in Dubai as we have got initial approval from Dubai Municipality" Mr. Ben Amer confirmed.

Prof. Reyadh Al Muhaideb, Prof. Mohed Faheem & Dr. Khaled Al Salal.

"Our buildings need to breathe because you need to bring air to the occupants of that building. In most buildings, the air comes in through pipes.

But in the type of building we are talking about, we developed an innovation called 'dynamic insulation,' wherein the ventilation can come through the walls or through the roof," Dr. Imbabi said.

Visual calls and Electronic Translator in Sign Language

- Ekram Yousef

The UAE celebrated the 32nd Week for the Hearing Impaired on the 21st April 2007. A memorandum of understanding was signed which focused on helping people with special needs enter into the world of information communication.

His excellency Mohamed Mohamed Fadhel Al-Hameli, the Vice Chairman of the Authority and the Secretary-general said that the agreement has Etisalat offering suitable telecommunication solutions and services to people with special needs; whereby they can communicate easily with their families, workplace, and the society. The service offered will enable transferring sign language into Audio/ visual phone calls, whereby a sign language translator will facilitate the phone call improving communication between people with special needs and society.

Furthermore, Etisalat currently offers special services for people with impaired hearing, while putting forward services for the deaf such as special directory for information inquiry services, e-mails, as well as a telephone printer service connected to the communication machine of the deaf.

Readers of Al Ain Times and residents of the UAE's garden city are uniting their energy and resources in a coordinated effort to improve the plight of stray and injured cats and kittens in our city. R&D Conference

- Al Ain Times Report

With the theme "Community Partaking in Research and Development," Shaikh Nahyan bin Mubarak Al Nahyan, Minister of Higher Education and Scientific Research and Chancellor of the UAE University, inaugurated The 8th Annual Research Conference with a reminder to the participants to 'discuss and analyse the effectiveness of the research enterprise at the University.'

"United Arab Emirates is committed to building a knowledge-based society. In that society, the University is expected to play a major role. That role, however, is dependant on our ability to achieve excellence and effectiveness in research. Effective research can be an important national asset when research is connected to various aspects of society – to government, to business, to education, to health care, [and] to technological developments," said Shaikh Nahyan, April 23, at Al Ain Rotana Hotel.

In particular, he stressed the need for a quality research wherein international expectations and standards can be achieved. "Does University research facilitate business innovation, economic development and social progress? Does it help in our understanding of how society functions and what society needs? Beyond this conference, who learns of the results of research at the University?" he prodded.

Among of the other issues Shaikh Al Nahyan wanted tackled during the 3-day conference was the University's capacity to carry out high-quality research and the steps that should be taken to motivate students fulfil their research projects and consider a career on the field. "Our aim is to sustain a University environment that nurtures creativity, problem solving and innovation. We must pursue strategies that help achieve this goal."

About 256 researches on cancer, diabetes and globalization were presented. The Research Affairs in the University collaborated with the Abu Dhabi Chamber of Commerce (ADCC), DUBAIL, Abu Dhabi National Oil Company (ADNOC), and Abu Dhabi Gas Liquefaction Ltd. (ADGAS), among others.

Straining goals – the importance of research

Researchers must not only probe and prove, for it is also their responsibility to find out how can it fit into the needs of a market or an industry. "In order to satisfy these needs, we have to learn what is happening nationally, establishing links between the university and the industry," said Dr. Khaled A. Al-Sallal, Director of Unit of Research Support and Services and Associate Professor of Architectural Engineering of UAE University.

Researches conducted in the country are improving. "More researches are being carried out. As a result, we cover more problems. Also, the quality of research is improving because more money is put into it than before," he added.

Among the sectors that participate in research development are engineering and medicine. "There are projects between engineering and medicine – referred to as interdisciplinary work. Engineering helps improve the technologies and equipment used in medicine."

"We need to find solutions to the issues we have at hand through research and development - if we don't want to fall behind. The society here in UAE is expanding considerably and we have to prepare for it. The industry and the university cooperate to keep things going.."

Projects Director Farag M. Sultan of Al Reem Hospico Co. agrees. "It is very important to provide the necessary space for research. Development here is very fast... Research can provide solutions that will overcome problems and anomalies. Relations need to improve with the private sector. The UAE University may have the tools and equipments to conduct the researches – through the papers that I have read, they seem to be on the right track. But still, a research needs finance."

Studies and Researches

Humanities and Social Sciences

From the Humanities and Social Sciences College, a presentation was given by Dr. Bahaa-Eddin M. Mazid, from the department of Language and Communication at UAE University regarding 'Translating Emirati Literature into English; its problems, prospects and projects'. This presentation examined local vocabulary, vocabulary relating to culture & religion and every day expressions. "When Emirati Literature is translated purely into English, it loses its culture in the text." Dr. Bahaa-Eddin explained and followed his statement by a few examples.

He concluded that the best way to translate Emirati Literature into English would be to translate with limits, neither too freely nor too explicitly, but to have a balance in between so that when it's spoken in the west it would be spoken fluently.

Food and Agriculture

From the Food and Agriculture division, Dr. Habiba I. Ali, from the department of Nutrition and Health, presented a case study on 'Nutrition knowledge of Emirati and Omani Adults with Diabetes: A pilot study'. In her study, Dr. Habiba Ali examined the level of knowledge patients with diabetes had about nutrition. According to research done in 2005;

25% of Emirati adults have diabetes.

In this study she examined 94 diabetic patients in total. The results were alarming as only 51.1% of them were taking care of their dietary habits; most of the diabetic patients had other complications and most were obese.

Also from Food and Agriculture; Dr. Louis Layele, from the department of food sciences, conducted a research study on UAEU female students. His main objective was to examine their dietary food intake in relation to Vitamins D and A and to correlate the results with Vitamins A and D deficiency.

For methodology, he used a survey for diet analysis. From his results, he found that the major source for Vitamin D was milk. However he also found that 70% of UAEU student's don't get enough milk. For Vitamin A, he discovered that a large number of them also have Vitamin A deficiency. Dr. Louis then tested different samples of milk and found that only 87% of the samples contained Vitamin D, whereas 31% of the samples were within an acceptable range, 30% were over fortified, and 31% were found to be under fortified.

Dr. Louis Layele was able to conclude from his study that Vitamin D deficiency is a "public health problem within the UAE".

His main recommendation to prevent vitamin deficiency is to increase nutritional education amongst female students within the university which would improve food intake habits of female students.

Medicine and Health Sciences

From the Medicine and Health Sciences division, a presentation was given by a fresh graduate; Salma Awad Mahmoud titled 'Anti-cancer Activities of Herbs Extracted from Identification to Mechanism'. She started with a brief description and background information on what cancer is and how it is a "master of disguise".

"Cancer cells are developing resistance to chemotherapy agents so new approaches are needed."

In her study, super critical carbon dioxide was used to extract the effective components in the form of crude extracts. Fourteen herbs were screened in this study. The most important one out of all 14 herbs was clove which is a "good candidate and anti-tumor agent through the induction of programme cells"

The next step of this research will be in vivo (testing on animals), this will help to test for preventions.

She concluded that we should "let our food be our medicine".

Leaders in research

The keynote speaker at the opening event was Professor Arthur Bienenstock of Stanford University and Special Assistant to the President for Federal Research Policy in the USA. Prof. Bienenstock highlighted the essential characteristics of a research university during his lecture. "Although there are many different types of research universities in the world – each with its own and unique area of focus, they share certain common futures", he explained. If the UAEU is to reach its objective of becoming a leading research university, it needs to share in the following traits:

- High quality faculty and staff that are leaders in their field and committed to research
- High quality graduate students who are eager to learn and conduct research

- An encouraging academic climate

During his address, Prof. Bienenstock repeatedly emphasized the importance of gaining a critical mass of high quality faculty. "Appointing and keeping good quality faculty members is vital to a research university – both for conducting the research and guiding the leaders of tomorrow". Universities therefore need to plan carefully what their area of [research] emphasis is going to be and actively seek the best scholars and teachers from around the world – both at junior and senior level".

Although research funding is expensive, Prof. Bienenstock explained the importance of this investment both for the well-being and growth of a country's economic climate. "We have repeatedly found that money they spent on funding research is worth it and drives the US economy. Of the 150 largest public traded companies in Silicon Valley, 37 of them are Stanford alumni". These big names include Google, Yahoo and e-Bay to name but a few.

The opening lecture was concluded by Dr. Bienenstock applauding the UAE University for its vision and commitment to research. "You need to keep on cultivating an intellectual climate that is open to new findings, attracts good students and allows its faculty to engage their students into new areas of research that will have a lasting effect on the community and the world at large".

EDUCATION & CULTURE

ASK THE VET

food and bacteria to be trapped in the mouth. This will in turn lead to gingivitis (inflammation of gums) as well as periodontitis and teeth decay with the associated pain and "bad breath". More severe cases can develop mouth ulcers and even tooth root abscesses.

Dear Dr A..

I have noticed that my male cat "Jasper" has been a bit picky on his food lately and occasionally seems to drop food out of his mouth after he has tried to chew it.

Do you think it could be his teeth?

Olivia

Dear Olivia,

Cats, while not subjected to the high sugar diets that we often associate with tooth decay are still prone to getting various types of oral afflictions. Like us however it is often governed by the diet the cat is eating. If the cat gets too much soft food (canned food, minced chicken or beef) then there is not much friction and stimulation on the teeth and gums, which allows plaque to build quite quickly. Once this happens then mineral deposits called "tartar" can build up allowing

At the moment it sounds like Jasper needs to have his mouth examined to assess the situation and determine whether the teeth need scaling and cleaning or even possible extraction. Given he is dropping his food then it is quite possible that's what he may require. This of course would need to be done under anaesthetic.

Dry food diets tend to decrease the likelihood of developing mouth problems and some specialised products such as Hills t/d, can not only prevent but also treat the problem before it advances too far. The sooner he is looked at, treated and put back on a more balanced, healthier diet the better.

It is also worth mentioning that occasionally cats can get certain viruses such as FIV (similar to human aids) and Feline Leukaemia (FeLV) which can predispose cats to bad gingivitis and mouth ulcers so that if it was getting recurrent problems he may need to be tested for these.

Al Sanawbar School organized and produced two English festivals

One from grades 1-6 titled "English in Action" and the other from grades 7-12 titled "Reflections". The students from grades 1-6 carried out different sketches and songs in beautifully tailored colored costumes while the students from grades 7-12 performed a mixture of theme based presentations including heritage, a play for Shakespeare and the Chinese pot. The events helped raise an awareness of human and cultural values. Parents also expressed their gratitude to the school for the unique experience the school provided for their children to develop their oral presentation skills and build their self confidence.

Lack of HIV and AIDS education hounds Al Ain students

- Lucky Mae F. Quilao

There is insufficient knowledge on the issue of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) and Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) among the Grade 12 students of Al Ain as well as a lack of support for the patients who have the disease, Dr. Michal Grivna, Assistant Professor at the Department of Community Medicine of the Faculty of Medicine and Health Sciences at the UAE University found out.

In their research entitled «Knowledge, Attitudes and Beliefs among UAE High School Students regarding HIV/AIDS,» Dr. Grivna and his peers discovered that only 89% of males and 92% of females believe that HIV is a virus, while 57% of males and 60% of females consider AIDS as a disease. The study was participated in by 1903 students from 18 schools in Al Ain (1525) and Abu Dhabi (378). Out of the respondents, 57% were UAE nationals while 99% are Muslims.

«The main goal of our present study was to act upon the results of our first survey in order to reduce the frequency of HIV transmission among young Emiratis and other Arabs in the UAE by improving knowledge about HIV and AIDS prevention among Arab high school students in Al Ain and Abu Dhabi. A second goal included helping train medical students in research methodology, AIDS educational methods, and methods of evaluation of educational interventions for health promotion. A third goal was to provide research-based recommendations for future HIV and AIDS teaching for the Department of Preventive Medicine and School Health Authorities,» he said.

Only 19% of males and 9% of females adhere to the fact that mosquito bites can cause an HIV transmission. About 95% of males and 96% of females thought babies can inherit their mother's disease. Some 71%, on the other hand, insisted on having HIV tests, and 12% would report to the police if they had the virus during a premarital intercourse.

In lieu of this, Dr. Grivna's team had conducted an intervention programme to rectify the presumptions of the students regarding the virus and the disease. «Prior to the intervention, there were many misconceptions of knowledge about HIV/AIDS, and stigmatizing attitudes towards people living with HIV/AIDS. Overall, there were highly significant improvements in both knowledge and attitudes after the intervention.»

«We recommend that this educational program should be given to all high school students, and perhaps also to university students. The program should be given by individuals who have received appropriate training in conducting the workshops, as these are essential in helping to modify attitudes. Since the time requirements are minimal, all schools should be able to include HIV/AIDS educational interventions of this nature in their programs.»

Traditions: Ayyala

Ayyala is a local dance performed at weddings as well as other special occasions. It is difficult to trace the origins of the Ayyala to a specific time. Whilst in the past it was danced in preparation for war and as a victory dance danced after a battle had been fought and won, today Ayyala represents the love of equestrianism, battle and victory and is performed at all sorts of celebrations. Men form two closely packed lines, each with one arm around the waist of his neighbour, symbolizing unity and tribal commitment. In the center is the band, a minimum of two people, who beat on the drums and 'daff' and 'twaya-saat'. The head of the band is a man with a two sided drum called 'kaaser' and establishes the main rhythm necessary for the dance, known as 'abow'. The leader of the band gives a signal to start the dance and the drummers start to beat their drums. The two lines of men dance in one continuous motion for a time. The drummers sway to one direction while the sword holders sway in the opposite direction. In representation of a battle scene, one of the lines starts to sing the first lines of the poem and the other lines bows submissively to the sound, then the second line sings the same lines and the first line bows. Each stanza is performed in the same manner until they reach the end of the poem. Swords and guns are exhibited in graceful moves, all to show the power of the tribe. Spectators may join in the dancing and chanting as well.

TEENAGERS TO HELP MAKE THE WORLD A BETTER PLACE

-By Monique Holtzhausen

Eleven teenagers of the Al Ain English Speaking School are preparing to learn more about life on the other side of the world and how they can contribute towards making it a better place. As part of their qualification in the International Youth Award (IYA), the Silver Finalists will be visiting Ban Thaton in Thailand from 24 June - 4th July 07.

"The participants will trek for 4/5 days (weather dependant) in the scenic mountains of Mai Fang National Park, where they will be assessed in their camping, navigation and teamwork abilities", says Oliver Miller, the Coordinator of the International Youth Award at the school. Once they have finished the trek, the students will spend a few days delivering some services to the local community, such as teaching English to the young Thai children at a local school, building a dining hall for the school and visiting the infamous Elephant Sanctuary where they will be assisting in cleaning the holding pens and helping

"Although they have been working very hard at raising money to pay for their trip, we are still approximately Dhs7000 short and are now appealing to the community for sponsorships"

in any way needed on the day.

According to Miller, the teenagers have spent the last year raising funds for this trip in various ways, including washing car windscreens recently, yard sales and an auction. "Although they have been working very hard at raising money to pay for their trip, we are still approximately Dhs7000 short and are now appealing to the community for sponsorships". The cost of the trip is approx Dhs5000 per student, but not all the participants can afford the trip. "We would also like to make a small financial donation to the local school and/or Elephant Sanctuary", Miller says.

Concludes Miller: "The International Youth Award is an important part of a young person's development and we look forward to this trip as being a wonderful opportunity for young boys and girls from various different nationalities and backgrounds to grow into becoming confident, mature young adults".

Individuals or companies who would like to make a financial contribution for the trip can contact the school on (03) 767-8636 or via email on ogmillar@aaess.sch.ae.

Art Morning at FIPS

The art morning helped the children explore their creative side, through the use of various tools (such as stained-glass paintings and collages). The event helped nurture the children's imaginative and creative skills. Both parents and teachers who attended found the event very beneficial for the student's aesthetic development. It was a great success

On the 19th of April, the Future International Private School held an art morning. The art morning accommodated students from grade 1 to grade 7.

ARABIAN TRAVEL MARKET VISITOR FOOTPRINT EXPANDS TRADE BUYERS FROM OVER 100 COUNTRIES ATTEND

Arabian Travel Market, the Middle East's premier travel and tourism exhibition which marked its 14th showing at the Dubai International Convention and Exhibition Centre (DICEC) the largest in the annual series with some 2,600 exhibitors from 64 countries – a 24 per cent increase on last year. "It could well double in size within the next five years," according to His Highness Sheikh Ahmed bin Saeed Al Maktoum, President, Department of Civil Aviation, Government of Dubai and Chairman of the Emirates Group. In the first two days of the show at the Dubai International Convention and Exhibition Centre (DICEC) up to the 4th of May, some 9,050 visitors attended – a 4.4 per cent increase on last year.

«Usually, a building uses a lot of energy. But it loses it through the walls that 'pulls' the air that people breathe. It is as if you are throwing air away. With a breathing building, the air becomes trapped through the walls, pre-cooling the building with less energy. Aside from energy conservation, a breathing building can filter the air that comes in and comes out. What is more is that the air that is exhausted out will be cleaner than the air that came in because of this wall system. All in all, you have a building that functions with less energy, and with a clean-up technology that picks up pollution so that you can have a healthy life both inside and outside of the building.»

Dynamic breathing buildings, although serving an ideal function, will not look any different from other buildings. «It will just give you more pleasant energy. You know, everybody is talking about the environment, especially the hazards of global warming. This is a technology that will enable us to do something about that.»

Developers will also gain from DBBs. «In the UAE, the benefit is even greater. In addition to saving some energy and refining a building system, air-conditioning costs will also be reduced. We have tried this out in a residential block in Abu Dhabi last year from June to December using an 'Energyflocell.' There, we measured the performance of the system in this kind of environment, and we found out that it will work here throughout the year without any problem. It is also applicable to commercial and residential buildings alike at an affordable price.»

But, just like with other researches that did not come into being, DBBs run the risk of remaining an idea. «Although this is an opportunity to produce a 21st century building, the issue is that it will cost twice the amount of a conventional building. Fortunately, there are some countries that already showed interest in this project. Once it is shown in one or two buildings, it will hit off in a big way.»

Dr. Mohammed Salah-Eldin Imbabi is a Senior Lecturer at the School of Architectural Engineering of the University of Aberdeen.

"We now have a group of like minded individuals from all walks of life who want to see conditions for animals improve in our city", says Susan, one of the passionate volunteers who has committed her time to the initiative. "It is encouraging to see how our numbers have doubled from one week to the next and after the article appeared in Al Ain Times", she says. Although growing, the group is still in need of many more volunteers and willing hands if they are to make lasting,

real impact.

There are many different ways in which people can become involved, including:

- transporting cats or kittens to and from vets
- offering temporary (1-3 nights) shelter for recovering cats before they are released back onto the streets
- fostering of domesticated but homeless cats until a suitable home has been found
- trapping cats for sterilization

•feeding colonies of cats (see below)

•manning information line to answer / refer calls

The Al Ain Feline Friends are slowly but surely getting themselves organized and are already to refer emergency situations to local vets who have pledged their support to our cause. "Thanks to the commitment of these vets, volunteers can now have street cats sterilized and injured cats treated at a fraction of the cost and with excellent medical attention", Susan says.

If you are interested in becoming involved in this worthwhile Al Ain Times initiative, kindly email your contact details to alainfriends@yahoo.com. In emergency situations, contact the Abu Dhabi branch of Feline Friends on (050) 582-2916 or in Dubai on (050) 451-0058 until further notice.

FEEDING STRAY CATS....

KILLING THEM WITH KINDNESS?

It takes a strong heart to resist the temptation of feeding a street cat that seems to be thin and desperately begging for food. However, your kind act of opening a can of cat food may be responsible for eventually killing the same cat you were trying to help...

According to the Abu Dhabi and Dubai branches of Feline Friends, they receive many desperate calls each year from animal lovers who have unwittingly made the street cats they were feeding, totally dependent on humans for their survival. "When these individuals leave the Emirates, they need someone to take over the job of feeding these now semi-tamed cats who have learned to look to humans as their source of food", Feline Friends warn.

If you are already feeding a street cat, stick to the following pointers if you want to give the cat a better chance of survival in the concrete jungle ...

1. Have the cat sterilized (Feline Friends have negotiated special discounted rates with participating and supporting veterinarians in our area).
2. If you are feeding the cat daily, cut down your routine gradually so that the cat can learn to look for food elsewhere on the days that you are not providing food. "This will also ensure that the cat does not forget how to forage for food and will continue to be recognized by the other bin cats", says Feline Friends. "Otherwise, if the cat suddenly has to re-enter the territory of the bin cats due to hunger, it could be badly attacked by the resident males and will not have the street sense to survive".

Another point highlighted by Feline Friends about feeding cats is to refrain from offering tidbits of food to hotel cats. "They are on the premises to keep away rodents. However, once you encourage them to approach outside tables for food, you are most likely signing their death warrant". Many hotels actually provide food in a separate location away from the dining areas for their resident cats.

Remember: an odd meal once in a while is not going to harm the cats. However, take care not to let it become a daily routine. Once the cat finds it easier to wait for you than to search for some scraps, you are on the road to "killing it with kindness".

Remember! Many female cats deliver their litters during the summer. To avoid coming back to a large number unexpected and unwanted baby kittens who have made your garage or garden their home, make sure to have your cat sterilized before you leave on vacation!

With thanks to Feline Friends

Employment problems bug Al Ain

- Lucky Mae F. Quilao

The employer promises, the employee hopes...

When James Barratt of the film Marked for Life arrived in Al Ain to work as an English teacher, his employer told him about a joke of a teacher applicant who had asked for 50,000 pounds a year and benefits for his starting salary. The human resources manager told him that he will even be given a 5-week paid vacation, 14 paid holidays, medical benefits, retirement plan and a leased car every two years. The applicant, astounded, asked the interviewer if he is joking, and the human resources manager answered yes.

Things like that happened in real life, even in the Garden City of Al Ain. The employer promises, the employee hopes. "Based on our contract, the company would increase our salary after six months. But until now, even though the government has already called for it, they are not giving to us what we deserve. They would not even give us our whole basic salary. They would pay our overtime after a year, and that is after we ask and complain. We would like them to follow what the government intended for us, follow how the labour system here works, but they have their way most of the time," cried a warehouse personnel who asked not to be named.

A worker from a car company also experiences the same dilemma. "We are asked to work overtime, but we are not getting paid for all of it. For instance, if we have worked for almost 70 hours in a month, they would just pay us 30 hours. Everything that is indicated on our contract, that we signed, was not followed. But we can't refuse to stop working because that is what our employers want. We know that if we would not follow them, they could terminate us, and we do not want that. We want to complain but we are afraid of them. My other co-workers are afraid too, although some of them do not seem to mind that we are underpaid."

There are also some employers who take advantage of their applicants who are on a visit visa. "I was about to 'exit' when my employer asked me to extend my stay and wait until they arranged my visa and contract. Now, they are deducting from my salary what they paid for the days that I overstayed. I don't think that is right, but how can I complain?" said a worker from a furniture company.

Not all employers are unfair and abusive though. There are others who treat their workers as if they are the company's stockholders. Unfortunately, office politics haunt them. "My boss was nice to me. But when my fellow accountants left the company, all of their tasks were given to me. Our head officer was doing nothing. He is not even a good one. I wanted to complain, but everytime I wanted to speak to my employer who is often out of the country, the administration department would stop me from doing so, telling me that they do not know how to contact him," disclosed an accountant for a shoe manufacturing company.

A writer from Al Ain who used to work in Sharjah packed his bags and left after his employer paid him irregularly for four times ever since he got in the company back in August last year. "At first, I tried to understand because I worked for a publication too in my home country and I know, money is not always good there. But seven months passed and it is still the same. They even managed to make it worse by demanding more work from me, and telling me that I am not working enough. You see, a worker needs money, because after all, what have I come here for? But they use that to their advantage. I resigned last week."

Working on a solution

The UAE has a Labour Law, which is a federal law applicable in all the emirates of the country and to all staff and employees, may they be nationals or expatriates, except for those that are employed by the federal government, armed forces, police and security units, agricultural workers and domestic workers.

The Labour Ministry, on its part, is preparing to set a mandatory minimum wage in the country.

Minister of Labour Dr. Ali Bin Abdullah Al Kaabi has started on identifying programmes, initially applying to the members of the construction sector then to the entire workforce, which he would recommend to the Council of Ministers. There would also be campaigns that would seek improvement to the conditions of the expatriate workforce.

Aside from these, the Ministry has also held consultations and signed Memoranda of Understanding with the labour departments from the countries the expatriates working here are from in order to facilitate a greater regulation of labour recruitment and supply from these countries. Any breach of local regulations will be on the responsibility of the recruitment and labour supply companies.

The UAE-based recruitment agencies, on the other hand, will have more exacting regulations, while an introduction of government-run recruitment agencies that would regularise and rationalise the procedures for recruitment, and eliminate irregularities within the process is being analysed.

Laws you need to know....

The following are some basic laws all workers should be acquainted with:

1 - Upon arrival in the UAE, workers should have a contract that states the date of commence, type, place, term, the duration & the salary and this should be reviewed and certified by the competent Labour Department. The contract is the strongest leg to stand on when in a labour dispute. Make sure you understand everything that is written and that you accept all the clauses before you sign. If the contract is given to you in Arabic and you do not know the language, demand an English copy translated by an official translator.

2 - The Employer should obtain a labour card for the recruited worker within 60 days of the latter's arrival to the U.A.E. Should the employer fail to do so, he/she would be liable for the payment of the fines due thereon. If the delay in the renewal is the fault of the employer, he has no right to deduct the cost of the fees from the employee.

3 - A worker who has completed one year or more in the continuous service, is entitled to the end of service benefit at the end of his/her service.

4 - In a labour dispute, the claim for any right as due pursuant to the provisions of the Labour Law, may not be raised after the lapse of one year. Raise problematic issues to the authorities as soon as possible.

5 - Recruitment agencies are subject to specific conditions, they may not receive any fees from the workers in consideration of the brokerage to find them a job. They receive a remuneration from the employers who ask them to call for labour from abroad.

6 - The employer & employee may terminate an unlimited term contract for a valid reason, at any time after the conclusion thereof, by a written notice served at least 30 days prior to the termination.

Some employers take advantage of an employee's ignorance of the law. Stay informed and protect yourself. A complete guide to labour laws in the U.A.E can be obtained from the Ministry of Labour.

The next time you have female friends of family visiting you in Al Ain, there is a special place you simply have to let them experience. Forget about boring trips to all the same historical places... While the men are out testing their mettle against the dunes or wadi bashing in their 4x4s, the girls can relax and be pampered at Cocoon Beautification ... a haven of luxury, style and sheer indulgence – in the true style of ancient Arabia!

As a Western woman living in Al Ain for the past couple of years, I have been hard pressed to find a local beauty salon or hairdresser that could offer me the same type of treatments, professionalism and beauty packages I have become accustomed (and addicted to!) back home. I know I am not alone in this predicament, as most of my friends either opt for the limited range of treatments offered at one of the local hotels or – like me – prefer to take their chances at one of the salons in Abu Dhabi and Dubai.

these misgivings disappeared last week, however, as I paid a visit to Cocoon Beautification – a stone throw's away from the Clock Tower roundabout and close to the heart of Al Ain. Although the outside of the building and the passage leading to the door made me feel wary and a bit worried, I steeled myself from turning around and running away and bravely knocked on the front door... As the door swung open, I entered a different world one of beauty and opulence of ancient Arabia at its finest. Soft music was playing in the background, scented candles created an intimate and welcoming atmosphere. I set foot into what felt like Cleopatra's palace in the days of old...

How it all began

"I started Cocoon Beautification two years ago with the idea of offering a totally new and unique concept in beauty care to our customers", says Kafaa Al-Kaledy, beauty specialist and co-owner of the salon. Prior to opening Cocoon, Kafaa gained valuable experience and qualifications in all areas of beauty, health and hair care.

"I am primarily a hair technician. However, I have furthered my studies."

Kafaa takes great pains to personally train her team of 14 beauty therapists. "Becoming technically proficient is only one area of their training. I make sure that they know how to make every customer feel like a princess", she says.

Fit for a queen...

Skillfully decorated with the finest silks, brocades, flower and finishes, each treatment room is fitting for a queen. Apart from special rooms allocated for all-over scrubbing with sugar crystals and oils, manicures, pedicures, facials and waxing, she has also recently opened a new day spa section – complete with a hydrotherapy jetted bath (that can be filled with milk for a therapeutic, hydrating milk bath), steam shower cabin and massage bed. Explains Kafaa: "This is a special area for our brides-to-be where they can be pampered and made beautiful for their special day".

The Treatments

Hot Stone Massage

My first treatment was a hot stone massage. I must admit that until now not been a huge fan of massage... Perhaps because my experiences thus far have ranged from being pummeled by a mini sumo-wrestler who grunted every time she applied pressure to my shoulder blades, to a butterfly-like tap that makes you pray for the useless torture session to end. At Cocoon Beautification, however, I experienced first hand what the rave was all about. Two therapists worked simultaneously on my tired shoulders and aching bones, expertly kneeling and applying just the right amount of pressure. A delicate blend of aromatherapy oils was skillfully massaged in using smooth, heated stones. A deeply soothing, relaxing form of massage, I felt tensions melt away and aching, sore muscles disappear and the flow of energy in my body improve.

Manicure and pedicure

The team at Cocoon Beautification knows how to combine professionalism with efficiency. If you are in a hurry or short of time, you can have your feet and toe nails cleaned, massaged and buffed while another therapist does the same with your hands. For feet and hands needing extra special attention, they also offer the popular paraffin wax that leaves your hand and feet baby soft. The salon also offers an extensive range of other nail services such as acrylic, gel or silk nails, nail printing by computer, whitening for hands and feet and hot oil nail care.

•Alice

Cocoon Beautification was the first beauty salon on the Emirates (and is the only one in Al Ain) that offers the Alice machine. Specially imported from Italy, Alice offers an alternative to liposuction by dissolving fat up to 7 cm deep in the hypo dermis.

•Hair care

Kafaa personally took charge of creating my new hairdo. It is clear from the way in which she handles a comb and a pair of scissors that this gal knows what she is doing. She offers skilful, yet subtle advice (ala Tony & Guy style) as to the latest trends and styles and how to make them work for the shape of your face, lifestyle and hair type.

Transformation complete!

I walked out of Cocoon Beautification feeling renewed and refreshed. My husband was impressed and pleased and didn't mind at all that I left him alone with the kids for a much-deserved session of pampering and rejuvenation. Apart from their affordable rates and professional and friendly service, their accommodating hours (09:30 am to 09:30 pm) makes it easy for tired mothers like me who are in need of a bit of pampering and TLC to feed the family, put the kids to bed and head off to a different kind of "girl's night out"! Cocoon Beautification will definitely be seeing me again!

AL AIN HOT SUMMER LEAGUE 2006-07

An explosive 60-ball 198 by Rahat Shah helped Pakhtoonkhaw CC trounce Ghantoot CC by 83 runs in round match of Al Ain Hot Summer League played in Al Ain over the week-end.

Rahat Shah, blasted 25 fours and 13 sixes in his match-winning 198-run knock, sharing an opening stand of 273 with Tausheet (69). Both Pakhtoonkhaw CC's batsmen, demoralized Ghantoot CC bowlers with their marvelous hitting, who were completely at disarray. The phenomenal task of scoring 352/5 in 24 overs set by Pakhtoons was never on cards as despite a good batting line-up Ghantoot CC batsmen succumbed to 269 all out, losing by 83 runs.

In the other 'A' division match, WED CC batsmen fully dominated the proceedings against, recently concluded Nehru Cup Champions, Mughal CC, beating the later comprehensively by 81 runs. Defying hot conditions, openers Javed Asim (56) and young Azeem Ansari (47) provided a solid century opening stand supported by a cracking unbeaten 54 by Yunus Rehmani late in the innings to amass a challenging 246/4 in 26 overs. Mughal CC were intimidated by exceptionally good bowling by Waseem and Yunus taking three wickets each as they were knocked out for just 165 in 21 overs.

In 'B' division outings, despite a brave unbeaten 108 by young, talented Abhishek, Al Ain Sportsplex failed to post any major threat to Al Faraa Greens as they lost the crucial tie by five wickets. Abhishek's courageous knock (108, 4 6s, 12 4s) did not earn much support from other Al Ain Sportsplex batsmen as they managed 222/6 in 25 overs. Al Faraa Greens wiped off the required runs in just 20 overs with Allah Ditta (59) again among runs.

In another 'B' division fixture, Baloch CC earned the top spot in their pool "B" with their third consecutive win in as many matches as they beat ISC Al Ain by seven wickets.
